- Pursuing excellence in teaching and learning, course coordination, curriculum development in Language/Linguistics, Arts, Literature, Communication and Education, as well as engaging in other activities as required at relevant levels;
- Contributing to the diverse research strengths of the Department/School/University;
- Publishing articles and research in peer reviewed academic journals as per University standards;
- Participating in curriculum review and academic administration for the Department and School;
- Engaging in research projects across a wide range of topics in the areas of

Language/Linguistics, Literature, Communication, Arts, Journalism and Media Studies and Education;

- Providing mentoring and advice to staff and students in the School of Humanities and Arts across all disciplines in the School;
- Participating in planning and administration through School and University Committees;
- Undertaking a range of administrative functions at School and University Level as and when required.
- Providing academic and administrative leadership to the School.

The University requires all staff to proactively undertake community, environment and social responsibilities as well as participate in University Committees as per its Strategic Plan 2022-2026.

Requirements:

Candidates:

- must hold a PhD in Language/Linguistics, Literature, Arts, Education or any combination of these related fields from a recognised University with at least 10 years of tertiary teaching experience;
- must have a record of demonstrated scholarly and professional achievement in the relevant disciplines with demonstrated ability to teach undergraduate programmes as well as post-graduate programmes through in- person, online and HyFlex or hybrid modes;
- are expected to have experience in course, programme, and research development as well as curriculum design and should have peer-reviewed journal publications;
- must be able to demonstrate ability to supervise students at Masters and PhD levels;
- must possess deep appreciation of the multiplex diversity of the University of Fiji's staff and students including in gender, culture and expression;
- must have the ability to organise high-level exhibitions and Film Society events; and
- must possess a keen understanding of the human values foundation of the University.
